Was my Mentor Correct?

A great friend and mentor once told me, “If you put it off until the last minute, it will only take a minute.” Sage advice. Thank you, Jim. It turns out I put something off until the last minute. You see, I was out of town all weekend and got home late on Sunday. I’m tired, probably dehydrated, I’m certain there is a sunburn on my neck, and I’m drafting this weekly newsletter late in the evening. Poor time management? No. I planned this! I spend the weekend riding my motorcycle about a thousand miles with fellow alumni of the Ranger Regiment so we could help support a fundraiser that gives scholarships to high school students in the name of fallen Rangers. Riding motorcycles, hanging out with other Rangers, and raising money for charity are a few of my favorite activities outside the home so when the opportunity arrives to do all three, I’m locked on target and wouldn’t have it any other way.

Russ' Note

March 29th is National Vietnam War Veterans Day. The way America mishandled the conflict and how society mishandled service men and women is well known. I don't want to dwell on that. Instead I offer this moment as an opportunity to learn and remember those who came and fought before us. Veterans only get to choose whether or not we are willing to defend our country. We do not have the luxury of choosing our enemy.
